EVA Air Expands North America Network:

Washington, D.C. Launch and Daily Dallas Service

EVA Air continues to expand its North American network with the launch of a new nonstop service between Taipei and Washington, D.C. starting June 26, operating four flights per week. With the addition of Washington, D.C., EVA Air's North American network will grow to 10 destinations, offering up to 98 weekly round-trip flights and further strengthening its position as the airline with the most extensive route network between Taiwan and North America.

EVA Air has also strengthened its Texas service. The Taipei–Dallas route has been upgraded to daily nonstop service since December 2025, further enhancing connectivity to one of the United States' key economic centers. Together with EVA Air's expanding North American network, the route provides greater flexibility and convenience for both business and leisure travelers.

EVA Air currently operates nonstop flights from Taipei to major cities across the United States and Canada, including Los Angeles, San Francisco, Seattle, Chicago, New York, Houston, Dallas, Washington, D.C., Vancouver, and Toronto. Through the membership in Star Alliance and partnerships with other airlines, passengers can conveniently connect to more than 200 destinations throughout Americas, providing seamless onward travel options.
